The phrase "breaking the waves" encapsulates the disruptive attitude of contemporary Korean filmmakers who refuse to conform to standard storytelling norms. They often eschew linear narratives, embrace ambiguity, and incorporate experimental techniques.

Disrupting Narrative Structures

- Non-Linear Storytelling: Films frequently employ flashbacks, dream sequences, or fragmented timelines to challenge viewer expectations. For example, Burning (2018) by Lee Chang-dong weaves multiple perspectives and ambiguous motives, creating suspense and layered meaning.

- Symbolism and Metaphor: Directors utilize visual metaphors that communicate multiple layers of meaning efficiently. For instance, in Parasite, the semi-basement apartment symbolizes social stratification.

- Editing Techniques: Rapid cuts, jump cuts, and montage sequences condense time and information, heightening emotional impact. Train to Busan (2016) employs swift editing to sustain tension during zombie outbreaks.

The phrase "Pictures at a Revolution" resonates profoundly within the realm of American cinema, symbolizing a pivotal moment when Hollywood began to undergo a dramatic transformation. Coined by critic and filmmaker Mark Harris in his seminal book, the term encapsulates the cultural, aesthetic, and technological shifts that took place during the late 1960s and early 1970s. This era marked the birth of what is often referred to as the New Hollywood or the American New Wave—a revolution in storytelling, filmmaking techniques, and industry dynamics.

This review delves into the five movies that Harris identifies as emblematic of this revolution, exploring their themes, stylistic innovations, and the broader context of their production. Additionally, we'll examine how these films collectively signaled the birth of a new cinematic era that challenged traditional Hollywood conventions and set the stage for modern filmmaking.

Understanding the Context: Hollywood Before the Revolution

Before exploring the films themselves, it's critical to understand the state of Hollywood pre-1960s. The studio system, dominant from the 1920s to the early 1950s, was characterized by:

However, by the late 1950s, social upheavals, the decline of the studio system, and technological advances began to erode this status quo. The rise of television, the decline in theatre attendance, and the shifting cultural landscape set the stage for a new breed of filmmakers eager to challenge conventions.
